CALLIMACHUS FR. 535 PF.: ANOTHER PIECE OF HECALE?

The close connexion between Callimachus' two famous hospitality stories, those of Molorchus (in Aetia bk. 3; Supplementum Hellenisticum 254-269, cf. frs. 54-59 Pf.) and of Hecale (in his epyllion), has long been recognized. We now know much more about the former than we did when Pfeiffer published his Callimachus vol. I (1949). It appears that, in the course of a conversation with Heracles, Molorchus said something like 'May the god grant you to kill [? or drive away] the lion, so that I may entertain you lavishly ...' (SH 257,21ff.). Molorchus seems to apologize for the inadequacy of his hospitality; at present, because of the lion's depredations, he cannot even go out to gather wood for his fire (see P.J.Parsons, ZPE 26, 1977, 18-19). No doubt the old man did his best in the circumstances,¹ but he looks forward to the time when Heracles kills the Nemean lion, so that he can entertain the hero more fittingly. SH 257,23 starts ὄφρα κε (ὄφρα κ') ... κε. Unfortunately traces of the intervening verb are obscure, perhaps corrupt; Parsons guesses ὄφρα κε πιαίνω κε.²

Turn now to Call. fr. 535 Pf. At first glance, a not very pleasing pentameter, ὄφρα κε πλειοτέρη δεῦρο δέχωμαι³ < ∪ — >, no doubt inhibiting others besides myself⁴ from thinking about the Hecale. But Pfeiffer observed that this might be a lacunose hexameter, ὄφρα κε πλειοτέρη <e.g. ξενίηι, φίλε,> δεῦρο δέχωμαι. The sentiment 'so that I may welcome you here with more abundant <? hospitality>' would be highly appropriate to either Molorchus or Hecale. SH 257,23 seems virtually to preclude Molorchus (who would hardly express himself twice⁵ in similar terms), and thus to point towards Hecale, addressing Theseus in her cottage.

Molorchus can reasonably hope to entertain Heracles in better style when the hero kills the lion. The capture of the Marathonian bull by Theseus would not achieve the same result for Hecale; she would have to recover at least something of her previous prosperity. So I

¹ We do not know in what detail Callimachus described the meal which Molorchus set before Heracles: see Parsons, ZPE 25, 1977, 43-44.

³ Pfeiffer actually printed δέχωμ'. On the assumption that the line is a pentameter, he argued (with reason) that correption of -αι in the second syllable of a dactyl would be illegitimate in the second half of a Callimachean pentameter. Callimachus does elide -αι. But ὄφρα δέχωμ' strikes me as distinctly unattractive; of Pfeiffer's parallels, only fr. 43,55 and hymn 5,64 come from the second half of a pentameter, and neither of these is in the same position.

⁴ When preparing my Oxford, 1990 edition of Callimachus' Hecale.

wonder whether fr. 535 Pf. might be connected syntactically with fr. 254 Pf. = 41 Hollis⁶ (perhaps only one or two lines are missing in between):

οὐ γάρ μοι πενίη πατρώιος, οὐδ' ἀπὸ πάππων
εἰμὶ λιπερνῆτις· βάλε μοι, βάλε τὸ τρίτον εἴη <of the wealth which I had in my years of prosperity>
ὄφρα σε πλειοτέρη <e.g. ξενίη, φίλε,> δεῦρο δέχωμαι.⁷

Hecale's desire to recover some of her former wealth ('I wish, I wish I could have a third part ...')⁸ would be ennobled if the continuation were '... in order to welcome you here with more abundant hospitality'.

There may be a faint possibility (which I do not wish to press too hard) of placing an already known fragment in the lacuna of fr. 535 Pf. On p. 359 (Appendix V(ε)) of my edition of the Hecale I put forward Suidas s.v. ἐπητύϊ as yet another, hitherto unsuspected, anonymous lemma from the Hecale. The meaning 'kindness, friendliness' (particularly towards strangers) could well have been extracted from the unique occurrence of ἐπητύς in Homer (Od. 21,306),⁹ and R.L.Hunter would see it also in Ap.Rh. 3,1007 ἐπητείησι.¹⁰ If so, one could consider.

ἐπητύς in the sense postulated would be a most appropriate quality for Hecale, πρηεῖα γυναικῶν (fr. 263,1 Pf. = 80,1 Hollis), as for the old couple Baucis and Philemon who owe so much to her ('super omnia vultus | accessere boni, nec iners pauperque voluntas', Ovid, Met. 8,677-678). An objection to supplying ἐπητύϊ in fr. 535 Pf. is that Suidas

⁸ Barrett is still unhappy (see my edition, p. 180) about τὸ τρίτον = 'a third part', asking whether there is a better parallel for this (with any ordinal) than Lucian, Tox. 46. He also desiderates something (e.g. καί, περ) to indicate that one third is not an optimum but an adequate amount, remarking that both difficulties might be resolved by the next line: 'would that I might have the third <or tenth, fifth, smaller> part (μέρος) of what I used to have'.

glosses with συνέχει, which, if from the commentary of Salustius,¹² ought to have been the sense of the word in the Hecale. This might, however, be a piece of mechanical annotation by the ancient commentator, who knew that words from this root were conventionally explained in some such manner.¹³ In Ap.Rh. 3,1007 the scholia gloss ἐπητεΐηαι with ἐπιτήμιαι, φρονήσεται, but 'friendliness, goodwill' seems more natural in the context.¹⁴
