N. G. L. Hammond

aus: Zeitschrift für Papyrologie und Epigraphik 100 (1994) 385–387

© Dr. Rudolf Habelt GmbH, Bonn
A NOTE ON E.BADIAN, 'ALEXANDER AND PHILIPPI', ZPE 95 (1993) 131-9

In concentrating his attention on the views which I had expressed and in disregarding the works of others 1 Professor Badian (henceforth B.) has created at times a false impression. The following example may suffice.

In the editio princeps of the inscription C.Vatin proposed a length of 31 to 36 letters to a line. L.Missitzis showed that a length of 35 letters was a closer approximation. Vatin stated that he did not include any hypothetical restoration ('on n'y trouvera aucune restitution hypothétique'), and he published the beginning of the text as follows:

\[
\begin{align*}
[ & ] \text{p} \text{c} \text{i} \text{d}[... ] \\
[ & ] \text{η}[... \text{π}] \text{ρ} \text{ε} \text{β} \text{ε} \text{υ} \text{ς} \text{α} \text{ν} \\
[ & ] \text{πρ} \text{ό} \text{ς} \text{β} \text{α} \text{κ} \text{i} \text{λ} \text{έ} \text{αχ} ' \text{Αλ} \text{έ} \text{ξ} [\text{ν}] \text{δ} [\text{ρ} \text{ο} \text{ν} \text{κα} \text{i} ' \text{Αλ} \text{έ} \text{ξ} \text{α} \text{ν} \text{ό} \text{ρ} \text{ο} \text{ς} \\
[ & ] \nu \text{ τ} \text{ή} \nu \text{ α} \text{ρ} \text{γ} \text{ό} \nu \text{ ώ} \text{ρ} \text{γ} \text{ά} \text{ξ} \text{ε} \text{ξ} \text{θ} \text{α} \text{i} [... ] \pi \end{align*}
\]

His line 3 consisted of 34 letters. Since πρεβεύω in the active voice means 'serve as an ambassador', 2 Vatin assumed 3 that the names of the ambassadors occurred somewhere in lines 1 and 2.

L.Missitzis argued convincingly 4 that the beginning of the text was the beginning of the document. He judged Vatin's restoration of line 3 to be 'safe', and he therefore adopted it in his somewhat different text. 5 I adduced some reasons 6 for accepting Vatin's restoration and referred the reader to some analogies. Since B. in ZPE 95 has not made mention of them, I shall now explain the relevance of one of them, Tod GHI 192, the inscription concerning the return of Chian exiles in 332 B.C. 7

---

2 L.S.J. s.v. πρεβεύω II 1. In ZPE 79 (1989) 65 n. 15 B. restored 'with the citizens as the subject' [διεκµέμενον] το κοινη. The compound διεκ- in the distributive sense of the nearly contemporary passage of X. HG 3. 24 was not appropriate to the Philippians sending an embassy to one person; nor did κοινη add anything to a πρεβευειο of a city-state.
3 Vatin 261.
4 Missitzis 4.
5 Missitzis 7 'safe'. In his text he restored [Φιλιππειο] ητει[ο]. The restoration was rightly rejected by Hatzopoulos 438 because the contemporary ethnic was Φιλιππειος.
6 Hammond, CQ 38, 390.
7 For the date see Hammond and F.W.Walbank, A History of Macedonia 3 (Oxford, 1988) 73 n. 2, preferring this date to that of Heiserer, 334 B.C.
The Chians, like the Philippians, set up at home a record of a negotiation with Alexander when he was elsewhere. The record began with the Chian dating and the occasion of the negotiation, namely the receipt of an instruction from Alexander. No doubt the Philippian record began similarly with the Philippian dating and the occasion of the negotiation, namely the coming of Philippian ambassadors to Alexander and an instruction from Alexander. In the Chian inscription the first mention of Alexander is πρὸς βασιλείαν Αλέξανδρου, and the next mention is simply πρὸς Αλέξανδρου; so too in the Philippian inscription, if Vatin's restoration is accepted. In reporting the instructions of Alexander both inscriptions employed aorist and present infinitives, and both provided for further negotiation. We are extraordinarily fortunate to have such a close analogy in meaning and in date. In the light of it and of the other evidence which I adduced I regarded Vatin's restoration as 'almost certain'.

In ZPE 95 135 B. made the allegation that the restoration πρὸς βασιλείαν Αλέξανδρου in line 3 was mine, and that I introduced it in order to support a theory of mine. He went on to compare this alleged behaviour with that of a card-sharper: 'once the conjuror has palmed the card, it is bound to appear when wanted' and 'it is the method of what one might call the forced card'. As he rightly said of his allegation: 'this is no way to argue in serious scholarship'. The allegation, however, is entirely unfounded. The restoration was that of Vatin. I did not introduce it into the debate, nor (to employ B.'s distasteful comparison) did I introduce it into any prearranged pack of cards. In fact in neither article did I suggest any restoration at all. B.'s further allegation that the restoration was made in order to support a theory that Alexander was addressed by his royal title is untrue; for neither Vatin nor Missitzis mentioned any such theory.

Whereas I did not propose any restorations, B. did. He proposed to regard ρεισδι in line 1 as a form of 'Persis', and he suggested restoring the text in lines 2-3 as [...ἔπερβέβεον ἀναβάντες πρὸς Ἀλέξανδρου] with the ambassadors as the subject'. He chose the 8 I agree with Hatzopoulos 438f. (see n. 5 above), that the ambassadors reported the instructions given by Alexander. I therefore reject B.'s alternative restoration with the citizens (of Philippi) as the subject in lines 1-3 [διεξαγωγικά το κοινό πρὸς Ἀλέξανδρου] (ZPE 79, 65 n. 15).

---

9 Tod, GHI 192 line 7 and Vatin's text B lines 11-12.

10 The Chian inscription being dated by Heisserer to 334 B.C. and by Tod and others to 332 B.C. (which I prefer; see n. 7 above), and the Philippian inscription being dated variously to 335 and 334 B.C. (Vatin 262 and Missitzis 9) and to after 331 B.C. (Hatzopoulos in Bull. Epigr. 104 (1991) 505).

11 This allegation seems to be 'the main point' of his article (134). It is stated emphatically, 'his restoration' being repeated on p. 135.

12 In ZPE 95, 134 B. wrote, 'I pointed out that several of the restorations accepted (though not initially suggested) by H., and his whole interpretation of the text based on them, were accepted by him, and suggested by his predecessors, out of a desire to substantiate the 'historical theory' (if we may thus dignify it) that the king of Macedon was normally described as βασιλεύος in official texts before 331 B.C.'

13 The restorations were given in ZPE 79, 65 n. 15 and 67. The boldest, which was introduced to support his interpretation of ὅρισα was [χώραν Φιλίππου ζώντος], of which only the last letter exists in line 7 of the inscription. Nor does Φιλίππου ζώντος commend itself; for it has an English ring, and I doubt if it occurs in any inscription.
word ἄναβόντες 'for the possible destination of the ambassadors'. It is a perfect example of a restoration planned to support a theory, that the ambassadors went to 'Persis'. 14 In ZPE 95, 134 B. seemed to think I was making a joke of this (he tried to explain the nature of the joke for his reader); if so, it was less offensive (I hope) than a comparison with card-sharpening. But I was and am quite serious, all the more so because B. has not sought to justify his restoration on any other grounds.

An entirely different point concerns the verbs [ἐπειςβῇ]βήκασιν and [ἐ]πειςβῇ[η]κ[α]σιν in lines 8 and 12. Vatin proposed 15 to restore [ἐπειςβῇ]βήκασιν in the opening part of line 8, and to complete πειςβῇκ in line 12 as [ἐ]πειςβῇκ[ότας]. Vatin, Missitzis, I and Hatzopoulos were agreed that the persons involved had encroached on land which was not theirs; B. in ZPE 95 did not discuss the matter. In my article in ZPE 82 (1990) 170, when I criticised B.'s belief that in line 6 ὅριςαι meant that boundaries 'had already been defined' e.g. in the lifetime of Philip, I remarked that for his interpretation one would expect 'a pluperfect tense, such as we have in line 12 [ἐ]πειςβῇκ[α]σιν'. B. in ZPE 95, 136 comments as follows. 'The form is, of course, a perfect and not a pluperfect. H. seems as vague about Greek grammar as he is about Greek word usage'.

The First Greek Grammar by W.G.Rutherford (London, 1918), which I used in learning and teaching Greek Prose Composition for some thirty-five years, showed 'how foreign to English idiom is the peculiar signification of the Greek perfect' (p. 91). Thus the perfect infinitive and the perfect participle in Greek carry in some contexts the pluperfect meaning. One such context is the report of instructions issued in the past. Thus on B.'s supposition that boundaries 'had already been defined' one would expect not ὅριςαι but ὅριςκέναι. So too with Vatin's restoration [ἐ]πειςβῇκ[ή]κ[α]σιν the meaning is that of a pluperfect tense: 'those who had encroached'. When the same meaning was conveyed in a relative clause [ὅσοι ... ἐπειςβῇ]βήκασιν the perfect indicative contained the pluperfect sense and is to be translated in English 'those who had encroached'.

Clare College, Cambridge

N.G.L.Hammond

---

14 In ZPE 82. 170 I said that 'the four letters in line 1 may be the remains of an ambassador's name ending in ὅς or ὅσιον', and B. kindly suggested some names in ZPE 95, 131. I wrote 'may be' because there are other possibilities, such as a dative plural ending in πετ e.g. τέκαρπετ.

15 Vatin 263 with the proviso 'la restitution est hypothétique'.